For Immediate Release

Red Kite Community Housing's group chief executive retires after 13 years at the helm

After more than a decade of dedicated service, Trevor Morrow, Group Chief Executive at Red Kite Community Housing, has announced his retirement.

Trevor has led Red Kite since its formation 13 years ago, guiding the business through a period of significant change across the communities it serves.

Trevor said: "After 13 years of forming and leading Red Kite, I have decided it's time to retire. Over the years, we have built so many great partnerships and it's been a privilege to meet and work with so many wonderful people. I know the great work will continue and expand."

The process of appointing an interim Chief Executive is now under way, with a view to someone stepping into the role next month. In the meantime, Alan Keers, Red Kite's Deputy Group Chief Executive, will be deputising and supporting the continued smooth running of the organisation.

All services and operations will continue as usual during this transition.

Ends
